Climate Change Adaptation - Implementing Strategies in the Baltic Sea Region

Philipp Schmidt-Thomé, Geological Survey of Finland
Jörg Knieling, HafenCity University Hamburg

Several cities and municipalities in the Baltic Sea Region have been cooperating for some years on climate change impact studies and the assessment of adaptation strategies. Naturally, most of the decision makers are mostly concerned about local impacts, but the cooperation of different countries within the Baltic Sea Region offers an important template to not only observe neighbouring countries and their activities, but also to learn from each other and formulate common strategies and goals with regards to future climate change adaptation strategies. This book has been developed from the BaltCICA project and can be used as a useful template for future adaptation strategies on a more global scale.

This book provides a comprehensive overview of the key steps required for the effective analysis and assessment of climate change impacts, economic cost-benefit analysis, communication processes and creation and transfer of knowledge, governance issues and implementation of related policies.

The aim of this book is to document the decision making processes in order to give examples for scientists and decision makers in other regions which are still in the process. Since climate change is widely taught in universities and is entering planning careers, the book also serves advanced students because it takes the step from theoretical towards practical approaches. This kind of a regional cooperation with such a targeted approach on implementing climate change adaptation in regional development is probably unique and can be used as a template for future adaptation strategies.

Key Features:

- Describes the progression of climate change information from data to concrete adaptation practices
- Provides national, regional and local perspectives
- Analyses the practical applicability of linking monetary values to climate change adaptation
- Takes a theoretical and applied approach to climate change adaptation strategies
- Includes case studies from the Baltic Sea Region alongside examples of international projects to highlight a variety of different adaptation strategies on a regional and global scale.
- Illustrated in full colour throughout
